ABOUT LAUREN

Lauren Bullock is a queer, genderfluid Black and Vietnamese writer, performer, and teacher. Lauren's work has been featured by AFROPUNK.com, Button Poetry, The Smithsonian Asian Pacific American Center, The Human Rights Campaign, and more. Lauren is a Kundiman, Watering Hole, Pink Door, and Obsidian Foundation fellow as well as a Susan Laughter Meyers and Furious Flower Poetry Prize finalist. An educator of over 10 years, Lauren currently teaches middle school Language Arts and World Cultures in North Carolina. When not creating Lauren enjoys fighting crime as a costumed vigilante of many aliases.

For over a decade Lauren has moved audiences with poetry locally, nationally, and internationally from coffee house open mics to universities to museum stages. Lauren's workshops challenge writers of all ages to tell their stories in unique ways.

Intersections in Lauren's written work, performances, and workshops include:

- Black American identity
- Vietnamese/Asian American identity
- Multiracial identity
- Queer identity
- Gender and race
- Pop culture commentary
- Surviving after sexual assault and domestic violence
